French graphics firm Ich&Kar's Caviar and Chocolat plates for Domestic are a playful riff on gluttony—even with the most delicious delicacies (top), it is possible to have too much of a good thing (bottom). Other dishes in Domestic's new Surface 02 series depict pixelated macarons, magic mushrooms, and a clown face constructed from fruits and vegetables; $78 for a pair. www.domestic.fr

Normal Studio's Jean-François Dingjian and Eloi Chafallet architectural landscape models inspire their Paysages dishware collection. The white enameled-porcelain pieces will appeal to home chefs and bistro-goers alike: Ligne Roset offers the retail line while French crockery manufacturer Revol (with which it's co-produced) offers it to restaurant-industry folk; $80-$375. www.ligne-roset-usa.com

We have scars to prove the failings of most ovens, but Breville's new toaster/convection Smart Oven is big enough to cook a 13-inch pizza and brilliant enough to pop the pie out via an Auto-Rack Eject function once it's done, putting an end to burned knuckles. Cutting-edge Element IQ technology choreographs strategic heating patterns to ensure nothing else gets burned in the process either; $250. www.brevilleusa.com
